

A Rashaki Maskani Perspective

At What Risk?

We all want something, and most of the time we want to feel good, euphoric. But life presents us with natural balance, therefore the desire to want constant gratification is unrealistic. If we paid close attention to our experiences through self-evaluation and environmental observation, then we can come to this factual conclusion.

Life is an entity to be studied and learning is constant and inevitable, but most people do not realize this point because they are mostly in an Instinctual Mode. An Instinctual Mode is a non-thinking learning mode in which environmental experiences becomes the main source of information learned, where reasoning skills are non-existent. Instincts is another natural phenomenon that people possess, but negative characteristics are non-constructive in human development.

I said, "people are not far from the cave," meaning that we are still in an infancy state as people. I also said, "if money is the value, then people are devalued," meaning that people are viewed by the dominant world forces as commodities which are expendable entities. It is a known fact that Racism and Classism dominate the world governmental systems, where only the one percent control all people actions. Most of these actions are counter-productive for ninety-nine percent of the world's population, meaning that people are treated as commodities.

At what risk will the one percent continue to negatively affect the ninety-nine percent? At what risk will the ninety-nine percent continue to act in an Instinctual Mode and not begin to self-evaluate their actions which continues to keep the one percent fully active in their quest to keep them in a commodity existence?

Answer, "The Human Existence That Conscious People Desire"

Human defined is simply people who act humane. When evaluating the behavior of people, I can conclude that most don't act humane, especially the dominate controlling people who govern by inhumane force. There are many examples, but I'll choose one, Israel and Palestine conflict 2023/2024, where Israel is committing geocide. This act is dogmatic, inhumane, and unreasonable. All over the earth conflicts of this nature place large groups of people in famine conditions. Another question to ponder is, can people evolve to a better way to handle conflict and differences in a manner where people are not killed? The answer is yes!
